CX-90 EARNS TOP SPOT IN RECENT CAR & DRIVER COMPETITIVE COMPARISON

“Three-Row Throw Down”

After three years of dominance, the Kia Tellurise finally has some competition. We convened four fresh contenders aiming to upset the crossover hierarchy.

By Ezra Dyer
Senior Editor, Car & Driver

On the family-car evolutionary chart, the station wagon slithered out of the primordial ooze to beget the minivan, which the body-on-frame SUZ drove to the brink of extinction. Soom enough, car companies realized that all most people want from an SUV is the look, which led to another form of mass-market people-moving machinery: the three-row crossover.

Indeed, there's a slew of fresh competitors vying to oust the reigning champ of the segment, the four-time 10 Best Winning Kia Telluride. Mazda's CX-90 brings a new rear-drive platform with turbocharged inline-six power and an upmarket interior.

The Kia interior is nice, but some of the materials lack the richness of the CX-90's.

MANAGER'S MONTHLY

Jim Orozco, our Sales Manager, shares insight on Mazda's Certified Program that allows customers throughout the Tri-State area to enjoy the driving experience of a Mazda at a discounted price point from a brand new vehicle but also comes with the peace of mind of a factory backed warranty.

Mazda is a favorite brand of driving enthusiasts who gravitate toward its edgy styling, agile handling, and premium interiors.

If you like the performance-tuned nature of Mazda cars and crossovers, its Certified Pre-Owned (CPO) program offers attractive: Mazda's CPO warranty, which combines any remaining portion of the Mazda new vehicle warranty with a 1-year/12,000-mile limited warranty and Mazda's 7-year/100,000-mile powertrain warranty for CPO vehicles (from original sale date).

For its CPO program, Mazda will accept vehicles up to 6 years old or with up to 80,000 miles.

That generous range ensures that Mazda dealers can offer a wide variety of CPO vehicles and price levels.

Certification by factory-trained Mazda technicians depends on a comprehensive, 160-point vehicle inspection and road test to ensure the car is up to Mazda's specs

EMPLOYEE NEWS: WELCOME NEW BABIES

Congratulations to all the new additions to our Schwartz Family!

Cherokee L and the Honda Pilot, Mazda ranks #1.

"You come at the king, you best not miss." It's as if Mazda had a punch list of the Telluride's best attributes and went right down, item by item, and surpassed them all. Smooth, powerful engine? The Mazda's turbocharged 3.3-liter inline-six makes 340 horsepower and 369 pound-feet of torque, enabling a 6.4-second sprint to 60 mph, second only to the Toyota. (The Mazda does require premium fuel to make its full rated horsepower – regular fuel, it's 319 ponies.) The CX-90 was not only quickest to 130 mph, but it's also one of only two vehicles here that even do 130 mph, which speaks to Mazda's confidence in the CX-90's high speed composure.

When our testers open the crossover's doors for the first time, only one interior consistently drew involuntary wows – the Mazda's with its quilted leather and swath of faux suede across the dash. And while Mazdas are known for pleasing the driver, the CX-90 is mighty fine for the passengers too. One logbook note read, "Feels the most business class of the second rows. Everything you're looking at and touching is nice."

The rear-drive platform enables a rakish long hood and athletic proportions, which are enhanced by the biggest tires in the group – 275/45R-21s. Pull out into traffic with an aggressive jab of the throttle, and the Mazda will bark the inside rear tire, reminding you of its rear-biased all-wheel-drive system. Sluggish steering with off weighting makes the CX-90 seem ponderous on the interstate, but the rest of the experience is quiet and refined.

Any demerits boil down to price – the CX-90 in this test is expensive.

While the 280-hp Turbo Select model starts at $40,970, our loaded-to-the-gunwales Turbo S Premium Plus carries a $61,920 as-tested price. And you know what? It's worth it!

for certified pre-owned vehicles. That does not mean "just like new," as it doesn't for any CPO program. It means that wear and tear levels are appropriate for the vehicle's age and miles.

Mazda also throws in a three-month free trial to SiriusXM satellite radio and sometimes offers reduced-rate financing on CPO vehicles.

We like that Mazda is essentially giving you a 2-year/40,000-mile boost to powertrain coverage.

We also like that there are no deductibles to pay under the Mazda CPO warranty and that the warranty is transferable.

Mazda's 160-point inspection of CPO vehicles is thorough and includes a road test. A Carfax is included to show the vehicle's title history, number of owners, and any reported accidents. (The inspection includes checking for accident damage, as well.)

Mazda CPO cars will get new tires if there is less than 50 percent tread remaining, and the same goes for brake pads. Overall, purchasing a Certified Mazda from Schwartz Mazda gives our customers the best of both worlds.
